These Administrative Regulations must be posted and maintained wherever workers covered by this Act are employed.

CONNECTICUT DEPARTMENT OF LABOR
WAGE AND WORKPLACE STANDARDS DIVISION

DOL-75 (Rev. 5/14)

 minutos

Maximum Wage:

Minimum Wage:

 SEC. 31-60-14. Employees in bona fide Executive, Administrative or Professional Capacity

(a) For the purposes of section 31-58-1 (b) “employee” employed in a bona fide Executive, Administrative or Professional Capacity” means any employee

(b) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(c) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(d) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(e) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(f) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(g) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(h) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(i) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(j) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(k) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(l) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(m) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(n) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(o) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(p) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(q) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(r) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(s) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(t) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(u) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(v) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(w) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(x) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(y) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

(z) “Employee” means an individual who is employed as an executive, administrative or professional employee whose primary duty consists of discretionary and independent judgment, which is a significant aspect of the work performed, and which amount is not subject to reduction by the nature of business or any act.

AA-007 (Rev. 1/14)